	"Judge throws out most of case alleging counterfeit ballots in Fulton"	The court only substituted Fulton County government organization Defendants with individual members of the Fulton County Board of Registration and Elections while retaining every single count of allegations in the lawsuit against each individual Defendant
	"A judge dismissed most of a lawsuit Thursday seeking a deep inspection of Fulton County absentee ballots from last year's presidential election"	The court substituted Defendants and refused to hear the attempt by the Fulton County Board of Elections to dismiss the lawsuit
	"Superior Court Judge Brian Amero's ruling jeopardizes the prospects for the ballot inspection to continue,"	The ruling had virtually no impact on the prospects of the ballot inspection and may make it easier to get the inspection once each individual election board member has responded
	"An attorney for the Fulton elections board said the ruling prevents the possibility for an in-person review of absentee ballots using high-powered microscopes in the Georgia World Congress"	The ruling does not mention microscopes
	"'That litigation is finished,' said Don Samuel, a prominent Atlanta attorney hired by the Fulton elections board."	The litigation continues perfectly in tact against the new individual Defendants
	"There's no lawsuit pending anymore."	The lawsuit is pending as written against the new individual Defendants
	"Amero dismissed most claims against the county elections board, the county clerk and the county itself, deciding they couldn't be sued under Georgia's sovereign immunity laws, which limit when plaintiffs can turn to the courts for relief."	All claims that were dismissed against government organizations were applied to the new individual Defendants
	"But Samuel said when the case is over, the prior order to unseal absentee ballots will become moot."	The only remote scenario in which the prior order to unseal the ballots would become moot is if a motion to dismiss is entered on behalf of each individual defendant and the court upholds the motion before discovery restarts
	"What happened: A judge dismissed most of a lawsuit seeking an inspection of Fulton County absentee ballots"	The court substituted Defendants and refused to hear the attempt by the Fulton County Board of Elections to dismiss the lawsuit
	"The latest: Little is left of the case, and election officials plan to ask for those parts to be thrown out as well."	The court only substituted Fulton County government organization Defendants with individual members of the Fulton County Board of Registration and Elections while retaining every single count of allegations in the lawsuit against each individual Defendant
	"What's next: Plaintiffs who believe there was fraud will ask the judge to continue with the ballot review."	The Plaintiffs seek the inspection to determine whether or not there was fraud
